

The Coffee Corner

Mid/March/2005

I was retuning a new TV set that didn't work properly "There's snow on the screen," I complained to the clerk. "Don't worry about it, lady," came the exasperating reply. "It's the season."

We received a long-awaited order from a department store three monogrammed men's shirts. The color and size were correct, but the monogram wasn't. My husband took the shirts back and explained the problem to the salesman. "Would you perhaps consider changing your name?" The salesman asked wistfully.

"Remember our picnics, Harry?" his lady friend rhapsodized. "I can see you now, standing on the hilltop, the wind blowing your hair, and you too proud to chase it...."

"My oyster stew doesn't have any oysters in it," complained a customer.

"Well, you had better skip dessert then," replied the waitress. "It's angle food cake."

When the tall blonde requested help from a clerk in selecting some low-heeled shoes, the saleswoman asked her what they were going with. "A short, very rich man," the Blonde replied.

My brother spent the week-end helping a friend install a hot tub. When the tub was completed, my brother got an invitation to try it out. He declined the offer explaining that he always felt that if sitting in one, that someone would come along and throw in onions, potatoes and carrots.

An Edmonton police officer stopped a very expensive-looking car at a radar trap. The driver jumped out, ripped out his radar detector, threw it on the ground and jumped on the device. "I paid $500 for this thing and it doesn't work," he raged.

"I don't know whether it works or not," the police officer replied. "I pulled you over for having only one licence plate."

One afternoon my four-year-old son and I were discussing how family members are related to each other. I explained that I was his mother and he was my son. Then I asked him if he knew what relation I would be to his children. Without hesitation he replied, "My Baby-sitter!"

By the time my son was 7yrs-old, he had mastered modern economics. When he talked of needing money for a trip that we were planning, I said,
"Well, Ben, there are lots of ways you could earn some money around the house."
"Dad," he said patiently, "I didn't say I want to earn it, I said I want to have it."

My father and I were on are way to the department store when my mother asked if we could return some draperies for a refund. We reluctantly agreed to do so.
The saleswoman in the drapery department asked for an explanation for the return. My father shrugged his shoulders and said, "Because I'm married, that's why."

At a department store my mother and I waited in a long line at the check-out counter.
When we finally reached the cashier, my mother handed her an item from the cart. There was no price on it.
Exasperated. Mother exclaimed, "Why do I always pick the one without a price!"
"And why am I always waiting behind you!" the next customer moaned.

I dread going to a dentist. Once I put wimp down as my middle name. The receptionist read it and laughed. Half an hour later, the receptionist came into the waiting room. Looking directly at me, she said, smiling, "the doctor will now see the wimp." Three other people got up with me.

Our preacher had tried unsuccessfully to get the members of our small congregation to sit in the front rows instead of scattered at the back. Nothing seemed to work, even roping off the last three rows with a sign that read "For mothers with small children."
One day he came up with the right solution when he announced that the last pews were "Reserved for lost souls."

Love Uncle Brad & Aunt Sheila

My husband and I once lived in the Yukon with our two very boisterous small children. We were there when the territory was rocked by an earthquake in 1958. My husband was working in the basement, and watched in utter astonishment when he saw the huge wooden beams that supported the house actually moving.
His immediate reaction was to yell up the stairs: "What are those two kids doing now?"

I was getting ready for a night out with my husband, when I noticed that my shoulder pad had slid way down my back.
After fixing it I squared my shoulders and said, "I wouldn't want to go out looking like the hunchback of Notre Dame."
"Much better," my husband said. "Now you look like a halfback from Notre Dame."
